His hero was Akbar, his aversion Aurungzebe. Akbar did his best to reconcile the two religions, and established a large degree of religious toleration; Aurungzebe was a fanatical, iconoclastic Mussulman, who persecuted the Hindu and cut off the heads of Akbar's stone elephants, because they represented animal life. If there had only been a race of Akbars, thought my friend, India might have been an independent Empire, and the necessity for the British Raj would never have existed. But Aurungzebe by his reckless intolerance spoilt everything. It was in this spirit that we went to visit the tomb of Akbar at Secundra, a few miles from Agra. These huge Mohammedan tombs are strange things....
