This campaign will result in promisee and some ore. The promises he must translate into tonnage as beet he can; the ore must be seen and its value estimated, so that he can know with some degree of certainty the quantity that will reach port in time for steamers departure. He must frequently travel to the mines to see whether he is getting the output. A miner that needs money may forget that he has a contract and deliver to the local merchant or banker, who will advance more money against the shipment than the ore buyer believes safe. The ore buyer relies upon his friends to keep him informed of the development of prospects, progress at...
